Rationale

Language plays an indispensable role, both in communication and learning. In fact language facilitates all kinds of learning. Deficits in language impede and obstruct the learning process. Experts in the field of language opine that optimal learning is ensured only when the linguistic deficits, in a learner can be eliminated. Besides creating a barrier in learning, linguistic deficits can create blocks in comprehension and understanding of the subject matter.

All students in a classroom may not exist on the same linguistic platform. Since learners come from different home backgrounds, there are bound to be gaps that exist between teacher and learner, learner and learner and between subject and learner. The above gaps must be bridged and a smooth transition from home language to school language must be facilitated in order to ensure optimal learning.

The focal point in this seminar is to sensitize, acquaint and familiarize teacher educators and all members of the teaching community with the Indian scenario particularly the Indian classroom situation and reach out to the learner besides developing an empathetic attitude towards them.

It also aims to examine the language policies of the country. The skills of language learning are pivotal in mastering a language. Several research studies in the field of language suggest Indian students need assistance, guidance and practice in the area of Reading and Writing. Hence they ought to study the connections between reading and writing.

Objectives of the Seminar :

- i. To sensitize participants of the seminar to the language diversity in the classroom.
- ii. To trace the influence of society on language.
- iii. To critically examine the policies on language.
- iv. To examine the connections that exist between reading and writing
